

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The discovery of the early heritage of Upper Tibet was made possible through the friendship and cooperation of many fine people. I express profound gratitude to my Bon teachers of Tibetan history and literature: His Holiness Menri Khenpo, Lopön Tenzin Namdak, Khenpo Tenpa Yungdrung, and Yungdrung Tenzin. Their great expertise and kind assistance were absolutely essential in the undertaking and consummation of my research.

I warmly acknowledge the assistance and guidance of numerous Tibet Autonomous Region provincial, prefectural, county, and township authorities. Their help was indispensable in the pursuance of my fieldwork. I must also pay tribute to all the fine inhabitants of Upper Tibet who acted as my guides, informants and companions. Moreover, I could not have comprehensively explored sites throughout the region without the institutional sponsorship of the Tibetan Academy of Social Sciences and the Ngari Xiangxiong Cultural Exchange Association. Wang Songping of the Ngari Xiangxiong Cultural Exchange Association and Dondrup Lhagyal, Konchok Giatso and Guge Tsering Gyalpo of the Tibetan Academy of Social Sciences deserve special mention for their personal support and good will. The drivers, cooks and assistants who accompanied me in Upper Tibet warrant much credit for facilitating what were challenging expeditions.

Editorial input and proofreading, a requisite part of the production of any book, was expertly provided by Meryl Dowman (Kathmandu), Mariette Wiebenga (Overveen), Dawn Collins (Lhasa), and Mimi Church (Santa Fe). The professional editing and layout skills of Jim Roberts (Toronto) have also been of tremendous value. The critical inputs of various scholars have proven crucial in bringing this work to fruition. Mariette Wiebenga offered very helpful suggestions on form and content, which have improved my analyses. John W. Olsen and Mark Aldenderfer (University of Arizona) read Part One, inspecting my archaeological findings and interpretations. Martin Mills (University of Aberdeen) commented on the historical methodology found in the General Introduction and in Part Two. Guntram Hazod (Hummelberg) and Per K. Sørensen (Leipzig), reading through the work, offered precious insights into the dynastic history of Central Tibet. Nicolas Tournadre (Aix en Provence) provided valuable linguistic comments on Old Tibetan vocabulary. Matthew Akester (Kathmandu) graciously shared his impressions on matters of style and the rhetorical tone of the work. I am also grateful to Sangye Tandar Naga of the Library of Tibetan Works and Archives for proofreading the Tibetan texts. Thanks to the good offices of the State Hermitage Museum (Saint Petersburg), the Institute of History of Material Culture (Saint Petersburg) and the Institute of Archaeology of the Russian Academy of Sciences (Moscow), my 2004 research mission to better understand the prehistory of Inner Asia was an unqualified success. I have also enjoyed much cooperation from personnel at the Library of Tibetan Works and Archives (Dharamsala), Bodleian (Oxford) and the Library of Congress (Washington D. C.).

The organizations and individuals who supported my work demand special acknowledgement: the Asian Cultural Council (New York), Donald & Shelley Rubin Foundation (New York), Tibetan Medical Foundation (Weslaco), Trust for Mutual Understanding (New York), Unicorn Foundation (Atlanta), Kalpa Group (London), Lumbini International Research Institute (Lumbini), National Geographic Society Expeditions Council (Washington D.C.), John Bellezza (Southampton), Richard and Mary Lanier (New York), and Mickey Stockwell (Boulder). Without the material aid and moral support offered by these fine associations and individuals most of my fieldwork in Upper Tibet would never have gotten off the ground. I also salute the Shang Shung Institute of Choegyal Namkhai Norbu for the help it has rendered me over the years. It is with much pleasure that I extend my thanks to David Germano (University of Virginia), Ernst Steinkellner (Universität Wien) and Gene Smith (Tibetan Buddhist Resource Center) for their friendly guidance and encouragement. I express my gratitude to Shargan Wangdu (Lhasa) for his help in translating Chinese archaeological papers into Tibetan, and to Maria Rogacheva and Alexander Zorin (Saint Petersburg) for their translations of Russian language academic works into English.

Finally, from the bottom of my heart I must thank His Holiness the Dalai Lama for his unstinting moral and material support over the years. His Holiness's abiding interest in my exploration of ancient Tibet has proven a great boon.

Despite the able guidance given me by many good people, I acknowledge that I may have made mistakes. I assume full responsibility for any shortcomings in this book and beg the reader's pardon.
