Around 70 scientists from eight countries will present their research activities. The topics will cover issues of natural sciences as well as various management aspects of exploring the natural and cultural landscapes of protected areas. This includes contributions on the history of protected areas in the context of conservation, on long-term monitoring activities, global change as well as on transdisciplinary projects.

Interested? Then grab the opportunity to share valuable information as well as common interests and order the final symposium program. This could be your chance to discuss ideas reaching far beyond the boundaries of protected areas, countries and subjects.
