However, Dr. Dmitry RUKHLIADEV (Petersburg) in his e-mails of 5.12.08 and 9.05.09 kindly informed us that ötür is an active participle of öt-/üt- “to pass, pierce, penetrate, survive, etc.” and so it could mean “sharp, smart, penetrating, surviving (as a protective name)” or a kind of a piercing weapon.)

My reconstruction Yaylaqar, the ruling clan of the Uyghur Empire, takes into account KLASHTORNYJ’s reading iji j’yl’ayr in the Runic version of the same inscription, which is, however, rejected by KATAYAMA Akio (片山章雄) in the re-edition of the text (Inscr. in Mong., p. 226). Nevertheless, it seems unquestionable that the Sevrey stone originates from the time of the Uyghur empire (744-840), so the Yaylaqar are expected to be mentioned here, as in contemporary Runic texts (see *Sev. Here, it is probably a part of a compound-name, either Semitic or Turkic, as suggested by SIMS-W., op.cit., p. 57. — D Syr. yšw' /Išō/, from Old Hebrew. M SCHWARTZ (Rev. SCE, p. 413, n. 6) argues that Sogdian pronunciation was /Išōy/, with 'ain realized as a fricative y, see 'yšwy | [mšyx]' in the National S script below.*

The reading of the inscription on the cross (B4) remains partially unsure. S wyδ is an acc. form of xyδ (see SIMS-W., C2, p. 235) and does not appear in nominative clauses. It is not separated from the following word and I see aleph (or n/z) between δ and y, the shape of š is also untypical. Other variant readings (suggested by SIMS-WILLIAMS) are yr'wx for OTu. yaruq "light" (cf. #1516-17) and br'wx for WMIr. farrux (cf. r'ymst brwy, #1007). The word prnwr'-ktr “sehr glückvernehmend” is hapax and strangely separated into two sections of the inscription; its third letter approximates S δ much more than n/z.

In MWMIr. yyšw, yšw', yyšw'', yyšw', but most often yyšw'. The forms yyšw z-ntkr in Ōt., No. 5756, a2, p. 105 and 'yšw in Ōt., 7003, 4, p. 110 are MP forms in S script. In Ōt., 7453 maybe as a part of a Manichean personal name in a list-fragment? Note that in the M texts in the N script the final γ is lacking (unlike Christian usages, cf. also under šmywn, #1169).

The CS form does not present difficulties, while in *yw'rk()*s the initial y in the place of the original g may be explained as either an Early Persian change of gi- into j (as gy'n > jān), and then as a Turkic reinterpretation on the basis of j-/j- (= /y/ in our transcription) dialect varieties; alternatively, it could originate in the Chinese transcription Yihejisī (宜和吉思, EMCh. PLB. ŋjä/ŋj-i-ywa^h-kjit-si/si KG. ngjię-yuâ-kjët-si*, LMC ŋji-χhuaă-kit-si), where the initial ŋ changed into y in the course of time, both possibilities discussed in DTS, p. 68. The Middle Greek pronunciation /Jōrgos/ (which gave Medieval European colloquial forms like Jürgen, Jurij, etc.) can hardly be related.)

HUMB., SIF, No. 7, has twrm'n, and this name would now find a pendant in Bct. Tωρομανο. The published photos of the inscription do not exclude such a reading, although SIMS-W. regards it as a less likely one. The name Tωρομανο is probably connected to Toramāna, a Hephthalite ruler (SIMS-W., Invaders, p. 233), whose activities fall on the beginning of the 6th century CE, the latest possible date of the Upper Indus inscriptions.

Note that the form dylwmy’ (in #1534: 3 which occurs further on in this colophon, as I was kindly informed by Prof. SIMS-WILLIAMS) disagrees with the conventions of rendering Syr. nisbas in S, on which see SIMS-W., Syro-S, p. 146; his name is rendered as Ywḥnn Dylmy’ in the Syriac version, see BROCK, 1981-2, p. 135 ff.

The name under B2, 2, So 12601 (ywx’nys) is represented not in its Syriac (ywḥnn), but in the Western garb: Gr. Iωάννης, Latin Iohannes (however, the form ywḥnys is also attested in Syriac), cf. ptrws, #945. The form ywxnwn (B3) possibly reflects the Western Syriac pronunciation /Yuhanon/, cf. ‘nty’xws, #111.)

Alternatively, the first part to ywp-/ywxt- “to learn”? HUMB., SIF, 67a, has ●●xtwnc, and SIMS-W. adds that the initial letters of this line do not look Sogdian.

SIMS-W. (UI2, 68) considers it as PN, with the suffix -nc, and gives the reading ywz-r’ncw as a possible alternative. One can read also βwz- and compare it to CS bwžbr “tax-collector”. Cf. also Bct. PN Iωčo. LIV. (SÉSAS, p. 136) now compares this name to rzm’nc (#1055).
